Creating and Maintaining Effective Local Government Citizen Advisory Committees

Vaughn Mamlin Upshaw
About the Series

Local Government Board Builders offers local elected leaders practical advice on how to effectively lead and govern. Each of the booklets in this series provides a topic overview, specific tips on effective practice, and worksheets and reflection questions to help local elected leaders improve their work. The series focuses on common activities for local governing boards, such as selecting and appointing committees and advisory boards, planning for the future, making better decisions, improving board accountability, and effectively engaging stakeholders in public decisions.

Vaughn Mamlin Upshaw, lecturer in public administration and government at the UNC School of Government, is the series editor.

Other Books in the Series

A Model Code of Ethics for North Carolina Local Elected Officials, A. Fleming Bell, II, 2010

Working with Nonprofit Organizations, Margaret Henderson, Lydian Altman, Suzanne Julian, Gordon P. Whitaker, and Eileen Youens, forthcoming in 2010

The School of Government at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill works to improve the lives of North Carolinians by engaging in practical scholarship that helps public officials and citizens understand and improve state and local government. Established in 1931 as the Institute of Government, the School provides educational, advisory, and research services for state and local governments. The School of Government is also home to a nationally ranked graduate program in public administration and specialized centers focused on information technology, environmental finance, and civic education for youth.

As the largest university-based local government training, advisory, and research organization in the United States, the School of Government offers up to 200 courses, seminars, and specialized conferences for more than 12,000 public officials each year. In addition, faculty members annually publish approximately fifty books, book chapters, bulletins, and other reference works related to state and local government. Each day that the General Assembly is in session, the School produces the Daily Bulletin, which reports on the day’s activities for members of the legislature and others who need to follow the course of legislation.

The Master of Public Administration Program is a full-time, two-year program that serves up to sixty students annually. It consistently ranks among the best public administration graduate programs in the country, particularly in city management. With courses ranging from public policy analysis to ethics and management, the program educates leaders for local, state, and federal governments and nonprofit organizations.

Operating support for the School of Government’s programs and activities comes from many sources, including state appropriations, local government membership dues, private contributions, publication sales, course fees, and service contracts. Introduction

Local governments often use appointed policy boards or citizen advisory committees (CACs) to engage people in the democratic process.¹ They may voluntarily establish CACs to support their work or to respond to community-generated issues. These local boards and committees help identify issues and priorities, consider and recommend actions, and evaluate outcomes. Despite the widespread use of CACs, however, developing and integrating their work into the governmental process remains challenging for many local governments.

How can local governments successfully work with advisory boards and committees? This book presents guidelines for local policy boards and advisory committees. It also offers tips on how to evaluate CAC benefits and costs, suggests ways for assessing whether or not to establish a CAC, and provides a model policy.
