121. The death penalty — capital punishment — is an issue on which many thoughtful citizens strongly disagree. Whether the law should provide for such punishment is a question that has been frequently debated in Congress, in state legislatures and other public forums. While the jury must, of course, follow the law as it now is and on which detailed instructions will be given if there is a guilty verdict, it is important for you to tell us what views or opinions you may have about the use of the punishment of death in criminal cases generally and without regard to the facts and circumstances that may be shown to be relevant to this particular individual defendant.

In any case in which the charge carries the possible penalties of life in prison without possibility of release, or death, the law requires that prospective jurors answer questions regarding their thoughts, feelings, and opinions on the possible penalties. This is true even though the defendant might not be guilty and, thus, the trial might not reach the penalty stage. You must not assume from any questions asked that Mr. McVeigh will be found guilty of any crime.

With these thoughts in mind, please answer the following questions:

(a) If you, individually, had the power to decide what the law should be as to capital punishment, how would you decide with respect to the following statements? (Please indicate yes or no.)

i. A penalty of death is justified in all cases in which someone has been killed by a criminal act. _____

ii. A penalty of death is generally justified when someone has been killed by a criminal act, with very few exceptions. _____

iii. There are some cases in which the death penalty is justified but generally it is not: _____

iv. The death penalty is generally not justified but there are a few exceptions. _____

v. The death penalty is never justified. _____

(b) In your opinion, what is the best reason for imposing a penalty of death in a case in which someone was killed by a criminal act? _____

(c) In your opinion, what is the best reason for not imposing a penalty of death in a case in which someone was killed by a criminal act? _____
