“It is extremely helpful to have School of Government faculty to be neutral advisors on the law. They won’t give you an answer but will point you to case law, often right in the moment you need the information.”

—Gregory Horne
North Carolina Superior Court Judge
Judges, magistrates, and clerks of court make difficult decisions every day that affect individuals, businesses, and governments. North Carolina Judicial College courses are designed to give presiding officials the continuing education they need to address the issues that come before them and to play leadership roles in their courthouses and communities. The Judicial College supports court actors in their ability to administer justice fairly and efficiently and to manage the organizations that are their courts.
The North Carolina Judicial College provides education and training for judicial officials, including judges, magistrates, and clerks of court. It includes training for new officials, continuing education seminars, and online offerings such as webinars and self-study modules. Much of the work of the Judicial College is done in partnership with, and is supported by, the North Carolina Administrative Office of the Courts, the School’s primary court education partner. The Judicial College also collaborates with organizations that offer specialized expertise in science, business, technology, and other complex topics that are coming before the courts with increasing frequency.

The Judicial College is part of the UNC School of Government, and many School of Government faculty members coordinate and teach in its programs.

Our History
The UNC School of Government has worked with court officials since its founding by Albert Coates in the 1930s. In 2005, the Judicial College was funded by the North Carolina General Assembly and School faculty member Jim Drennan was named the founding director.

Meeting Your Needs
Since its inception, the Judicial College has addressed the increasing demand for training coming from a growing court system. We understand the need for education about black-letter law as well as the need for information about leadership, technology, substance abuse, and other topics pertinent to the courts.

A Network of Peers
Our faculty are experts in nurturing small-group, interactive educational events that allow judicial officials to discuss the challenges of their profession in a safe learning environment.
