

AGENCY--DEPARTURE FROM EMPLOYMENT.¹

The defendant (name defendant)² contends that at the time of [the collision] [(describe other occurrence)] (name agent) had departed from the course and scope of his employment and was not then acting as the defendant's agent.

I have already instructed you as to when an agent is acting within the course and scope of his employment; and it follows from what I have said that he is not so acting if he is engaged in some pursuit of his own or is carrying out some purpose of his own. While not every interruption of the strict performance of duty is such an interruption of the course and scope of employment as will suspend the principal's responsibility, if there is a total departure from the course and scope of employment, the principal is no longer answerable for the conduct of the agent.

Once there has been such a total departure, the principal does not again become responsible until the agent returns to the performance of his duty-- that is, returns to the place of his departure or arrives at some other place where the performance of his duty would take him.

The burden is not on the defendant to prove that (name driver) had totally departed from the course and scope of his employment and had not returned to performance of his duty. Rather, the burden is on the plaintiff to prove, by the greater weight of the evidence, that (name driver) was acting as the agent of the defendant (name defendant) at the time of [the collision] [(describe other occurrence)].³

¹Departure from employment is not a separate issue.

²A claim by plaintiff that his agent departed from employment is likely to be rare. Should it be made, this instruction must be adapted accordingly.

³See Hinson v. Chemical Corp., 230 N.C. 476 (1947).

